Hitting Streaks

On Saturday night, August 16, 2018, York Revolution infielder Chris Ashby went 0 for 4 in a game against Somerset (which included a hit that was later in the game changed to an error) and with that ended the first baseman's 30-game consecutive hit streak -- establishing a new Atlantic League record. Ashby had recently come out of retirement to enjoy the record run of his streak. The post game wrap that night included an additional review of the overturned hit-to-error play that resulted in returning it back to the originally-scored hit -- which extended Ashby's streak and the Atlantic League record to 31 games -- where his streak eventually ended.

Another unique situation that arose with an Atlantic League hitting streak, involved Joe Jiannetti's 2006 hit streak that bridged two seasons (with 3 games in the beginning of 2007) and also bridged Jiannetti playing for two different teams (Atlantic City and Newark respectively). Originally, when the streak ended it was marked at 28 games. However, a post-streak audit discovered a game that was counted twice in the record keeping and Jiannetti's streak was then adjusted down to 27 games.

Other notable Atlantic League consecutive hit streaks:

- 31 Games (2008) Chris Ashby - York

Atlantic League 1,000-hit club

- At TD Bank Ballpark on Friday, July 27, 2012, in the sixth inning of the first game of a doubleheader, Patriot 3rd baseman Jeff Nettles singled to left-center off Southern Maryland pitcher Nick Green to become the first player in Atlantic League history to reach the 1,000-hit milestone.
 - Barely over one year later, on August 3, 2013, Long Island Duck Ray Navarrete hit a home run to left field off of York Revolution pitcher Michael Wuertz to become the second player in league history to join the 1,000 Hit Club.
 - On June 2, 2016, at Regency Furniture Stadium, Bryant Nelson became the third member of this hit club playing for Southern Maryland, driving a hit off Somerset pitcher Darin Gorski on his way to becoming the Atlantic League All-Time Hit King.
